Give your Home a Winter Wake-up for under $1,000

During a long winter, Mainers' home improvement instincts often seem to hibernate. Result: Your house goes into snooze mode until you wake it up in spring. But despite the season, there are a number of simple do-it-yourself projects that can improve your home's looks and livability. Here are four examples, each with a price tag that's typically under $1,000.

Improve outdoor lighting. Shorter days mean you're coming and going in the dark more often. Consider upgrading your porch light to an Energy Star-qualified model that matches your home's style, and sheds plenty of illumination to prevent falls. For a further facelift, you might install a lamppost beyond the steps or mark your walkway with path lights. (If the ground is frozen, wiring can be hidden under gravel or mulch.)

Make over your kitchen cabinets. If the wood is sound, you may get great results from refinishing them. Take off the doors, remove all hardware, and wash if necessary to de-grease. Level nicks and dings with wood filler; sand smooth, prime, and spray or brush with cabinet paint. (With Rust-Oleum's Cabinet Transformations kit, you can even skip sanding and priming.)

Spruce up your stairway.

Torn or faded carpeting, splintery steps, or shaky railings aren't just unsightly; they could be safety hazards. Strip off old carpet and fix any problem treads before refinishing the wood, repainting with hard-wearing enamel, and/or putting down a new runner. To steady wobbly posts, insert one or more lag screws through the base and into the staircase framing. Countersink the screw heads and hide them with bungs.

De-clutter your closet.

Tired of searching a crowded closet for what you need, then finding it full of wrinkles? The first step is to plan. How much hanging space do you want for long garments? How about shirts or blouses? Shelves for sweaters? Baskets for socks or scarves? Shoe racks? Tie racks? Epoxy-coated wire units are the least expensive, but wood and plastic veneers are also available. Search online for "online closet organizing tools" to help design an ideal organizing system.

Are your winter renovation plans more ambitious? Let us know if we can lend a hand. With home improvement loans as well as equity loans and credit lines, we'll help find the right financing for your fix-up.
